Never a Dull Moment in Serbia: A Buzz Interview with Aleksandar Andrejic of Andrejic & Partners

By Andrija Djonovic (December 12, 2022)

Immigration from war-afflicted areas, issues with the national energy company, and contentious lithium extraction operations are keeping people talking in Serbia, according to Andrejic & Partners Managing Partner Aleksandar Andrejic.

“In Serbia, like in most of Europe, the geopolitical situation is the biggest driver of activity and change recently,” Andrejic begins. “The country imposed no sanctions on Russia, so a wealth of Russian citizens and companies are looking at Serbia as an opportunity to move and reestablish their work and life here. Consequently, there are a lot of Russians and Ukrainians here that have slowly been migrating and becoming a part of the market,” he says.

There have been several adverse events in the energy market which were caused by the incompetence of the management of the Serbian national energy company.

Moreover, speaking about significant market occurrences, Andrejic reports of turmoil within the Serbian national energy company: “recently, there have been several adverse events in the energy market which were caused by the incompetence of the management of the Serbian national energy company.” This led to Serbia being forced to buy a lot of electricity – “given the current market prices, the government started pondering an internal reorganization of the national energy company and perhaps bringing in a professional governance board so as to avoid similar situations going forward,” he explains. Andrejic adds that the Serbian national energy company has been fraught with issues last year as well, with “disruptions across multiple production chains which subsequently affected the entire energy network.”

Furthermore, turning to legislative updates, Andrejic reports that, starting from January 2023, “all private companies will be required to issue electronic invoices. Up to this point, companies were allowed to issue simple paper invoices, but the 2021 Act on Electronic Invoices comes into effect after the New Year – meaning that all businesses will have to switch and adapt.” According to him, this will impact “everybody doing business in Serbia – we will see how smoothly this transition goes.”

Finally, Andrejic highlights some political clashes in the country. “There has been a lot of debate around the mining of lithium in the country,” he says. “Serbia has rich deposits of lithium which were recently discovered, and foreign company Rio Tinto was slotted to commence with its extraction and processing. This was heavily protested by environmental groups this spring, just prior to the April general election, and it appeared that they had succeeded in preventing the start of mining,” Andrejic reports.

However, “a few weeks ago, the newly formed government began to backtrack on their pre-election stance of being against the mining operation,” according to Andrejic. “This led to heavy clashing, with environmental organizations opposing it still, and certain politicians advocating that mining would only make sense if it were followed with a battery plant investment as well,” he explains. “It remains to be seen how this all pans out.” ■

The Fundamental Misunderstanding in Montenegro: A Buzz Interview with Milan Keker of Harrisons

By Teona Gelashvili (December 19, 2022)

Despite the constitutional crisis in Montenegro, there is still a steady inflow of diverse foreign direct investments, and the country's GDP is expected to increase, yet Harrisons Head of Montenegro Milan Keker remains cautious.

“Montenegro is going through a severe constitutional crisis,” Keker points out. “Politics is a driving force permeating every layer of society, so the continued lack of consensus in parliament puts everything on hold.” He adds that “the war in Ukraine obviously does not add to the positive side of the equation, and bleak – albeit well-deserved – feedback from the EU regarding the country’s accession and harmonization process obviously pressures businesses nationwide.”

“Montenegro’s situation is peculiar since it is the smallest country in the former Yugoslavia, which became independent quite recently,” Keker continues. “It is quite obvious that the time since the country became independent was not utilized by the political elites to establish proper institutions that would secure the continued defense of the social contract. This became quite obvious since the elections in 2020 when the equilibrium of political power shifted for the first time in decades.”

According to Keker, this has an undeniable impact on businesses. “Still, we see a steady inflow of foreign direct investments, which are critical for Montenegro,” he says. “At this time, this factor is mainly driven by our geopolitical location and the fact that the country is still cheap, welcomes investments, and actually depends on them.” However, he notes, “we are, of course, cautious with forecasts about 2023. I hope that the institutional crisis will be resolved at the latest by the end of the second quarter of 2023, as there will be general elections by that time.”

In terms of legislative updates, Keker reports that, in the last two years, the Parliament worked in a permacrisis mode. “There were many months without any significant piece of legislation being discussed, except the COVID-19 related regulations,” he says. “This year was marked with a reshuffle of the government in the first half of the year creating a loose majority in the parliament. Legislative processes suffered as comprehensive legal reforms, albeit urgently necessary, are missing,” he explains. “Even in cases where such comprehensive reforms were attempted, such as the introduction of the ‘Europe now’ social program, their practical implementation showed planning deficiencies.”

There is an interesting shift to Western Europe and American capital being injected into the Montenegrin economy. Traditionally, Russian, Ukrainian, and Middle-Eastern capital prevailed over the last ten years, but now it seems to be changing.

Generally, “we are in the process of harmonizing our laws with EU law,” Keker says, “but we don’t do it properly, because there is an inherent misunderstanding of the factors which should be taken into consideration when transposing certain legal concepts to this jurisdiction. These factors include differences in mentality, culture, size of the market, its development, habits of the population, and so on.”

As for the transactional trends, Keker notes that “there is an interesting shift to Western Europe and American capital being injected into the Montenegrin economy. Traditionally, Russian, Ukrainian, and Middle-Eastern capital prevailed over the last ten years, but now it seems to be changing.” According to him, there is also an increase in the influx of Israeli capital which traditionally operates in Belgrade. “BIG fashion recently acquired the largest mall in the country and is also looking at others,” he notes. “We also still see a lot of investments in the coastal area, mainly into hospitality and residential apartments for sale.”

Lastly, Keker highlights that a GDP growth of 3% is expected in the country for 2023. “It seems optimistic and, given the irrational public spending, overall, we shouldn’t be so hopeful.” ■

Fines, M&A, FDI, Start-ups, ESG, and IP On the Up in Lithuania: A Buzz Interview with Vilija Viesunaite of Triniti

By Andrija Djonovic (December 22, 2022)

In Lithuania, M&A transactions are up, litigation procedures are down, and the Competition Council has been handing out hefty fines for cartel infringements, according to Triniti Jurex Managing Partner Vilija Viesunaite.

“From the start of summer, we were already preparing for a bad winter,” Viesunaite begins. “Thankfully, we’re not there and are still busy, albeit some business sectors have shown signs of slowing down.” According to her, the M&A market – which is quite active – has been reshaping a bit, with “a clear trend of there being an uptick in the sales of local companies to foreign ones.” In particular, Viesunaite says that the Lithuanian start-up sector has been performing admirably and that “investors are going after these companies – there is a lot of investment in the start-up business.”

Additionally, Viesunaite reports an increased demand for legal work surrounding ESG. “Everybody is looking for legal advice in this area,” she says. “But, in order to be properly equipped to advise clients on ESG matters, one also has to possess a strong command and knowledge on environmental, financial, and other matters,” she adds, explaining the complexities of the area.

Moving on with legal market updates, Viesunaite reports that there is a downturn in the number of disputes in Lithuania. “Following a recent litigation survey of ours, we have discovered that the dispute numbers are down four times when compared to ten years ago. It would appear that businesses are not deciding to go to the courts as much as before, rather opting to try and settle their differences or engage in arbitration proceedings,” she explains. “The statistics indicate that there are, as of right now, 0.27 disputes per company when looking at the entire market.”

Regardless, even with litigation not being the weapon of choice for most, Viesunaite says that there is “still quite a high number of disputes related to corporate restructuring and wind down – an echo of the COVID-19 period probably. We can look at these as indications of what’s to come in the future,” she says.

Also, Viesunaite reports that there has been a boom in IP registrations in the country, recently, on account of the “EU compensation system, which our country was using quite a lot. A high number of trademarks have been registered, and we hope that next year will be similar, despite the compensation system being closed already, because new funding will open up next year,” she says.

Finally, Viesunaite reports that the Competition Council of Lithuania has discovered that a “large number of medical distribution and sales companies have been engaging in collusion, and they were fined EUR 72 million for these infringements. According to the Competition Council, this is their biggest fine yet,” Viesunaite concludes. ■

Hungary Bouncing Back?

A Buzz Interview with Erzsebet Szalay of BLS Hungary

By Andrija Djonovic (December 22, 2022)

The global economic downturn has hit Hungary much like the rest of the region, but the country may be on its way to a quick recovery on the wings of diverse and dispersed investor interest, according to BLS-CEE Hungary Partner Erzsebet Szalay.

“The global economic slowdown has impacted the entire region, and Hungary has been feeling the consequences too,” Szalay starts. “Still, with the recently passed US inflation reduction act, and with all of the economic activity in Western Europe to keep the markets alive – I’d say that we can expect a quick recovery of the region, in terms of legal work at least.” Additionally, she reports of strong investor appetite coming in from the far east. “In addition to investors from the Netherlands, the Nordic regions, and the US – we have also seen investment interest from China and South Korea.” According to her, these investors are no longer looking only into single countries when deciding on where to place their funds, but are seeking to have more of a “regional footprint for their ventures.”

Focusing specifically on Hungary, Szalay says that, somewhat surprisingly, the bulk of these investments is no longer going to Budapest. “The countryside is developing admirably, with a high number of manufacturing companies seeking to settle all over the country, especially so next to the Danube river.” She notes that most of the upcoming development is to be expected in logistics and infrastructure. “Major production facilities are popping up all over Hungary,” she says.

Turning more to the legal markets, Szalay shares that she expects an increase in dispute resolution. “As usual, whenever there’s an economic downturn, two areas go up in terms of activity – dispute resolution and M&A transactions. In this particular instance, I have to say, however, that disputes are no longer happening due to the pandemic blowback,” she continues. “The cause is to be found in the global economic instability and market volatility – high energy prices, unfavorable forint foreign exchange rates, and the inflation tide, to name but a few. With many companies having settled on their business plans for the next few years and now having to rework their approach, downsize, shrink, or change course – a change in their contract network is logical, but it also means having to deal with commercial litigation,” Szalay explains.

Finally, taking the temperature of the Hungarian economy, Szalay reports good vibrations. “Everyone has a bit of a sunny disposition of late, with a deal being struck for some EU funds. However, receiving the actual funds under the recently sealed political deal is still a way off and, with some of the EU funds still being frozen, the economy might struggle more.” Still, she concludes, “overall, we see a wealth of opportunities.” ■

(Business) Life Did Not Stop in Ukraine: A Buzz Interview with Taras Utiralov of Peterka & Partners

By Teona Gelashvili (December 23, 2022)

Despite missile strikes, businesses and society adapt to the new reality, with some non-war-related transactions in the works, according to Peterka & Partners Partner Taras Utiralov.

“Some time ago, when I was reading about the second world war, a thought crossed my mind – that life must have stopped during those years,” Utiralov says. “It was my surprise to realize that in Ukraine, life didn’t stop after the invasion. As we speak, there is a new missile attack on Ukraine, our staff is in shelters and work is interrupted as there is no water supply or electricity in Kyiv. With the electricity off in the whole region, mobile networks and the internet can also be down for some time. This affects businesses, of course, but it’s not so critical for the legal business. It may delay some processes a bit in our industry, but it has naturally much more impact on restaurants, supermarkets, and so on.” Still, Utiralov says that people continue to have as normal of a life as possible: “we have discovered how adaptive we can be. The sky is the limit – even missile strikes on power stations don’t help Russia win the war, because we just adapt and continue.”

According to Utiralov, the legal sector remained busy despite the war. “During the first few months of the invasion, we were busy with requests for information about martial law and employment, as people were moving from Ukraine. However, over the last few months, we have received more and more usual requests that are not connected to the war.” According to Utiralov, these aren’t landmark deals with multibillion dollars of investments, but still, there is a steady growth of such requests. “We also have litigations related to the consequences of the war, including cases where someone couldn’t deliver a product because of the war or goods being stolen,” he adds.

Utiralov says that real estate is on hold: “whatever asset you might buy today, can be destroyed tomorrow. On the other hand, businesses that have survived the war and are not operating in areas close to active warfare, are still involved in transactions.” According to Utiralov, “such businesses included chemical production facilities, agriculture, and supply-related companies.”

During the first few months of the invasion, we were busy with requests for information about martial law and employment, as people were moving from Ukraine. However, over the last few months, we have received more and more usual requests that are not connected to the war.

Utiralov highlights recent legislative developments in Ukraine. “As we received the EU member candidate status, we have to adopt a large number of new legislative acts,” he says. “Additionally, in the last month, new legislative acts were adopted on joint stock companies, copyright, and electronic residency for foreigners. Interestingly, as soon as the last one comes into force, foreigners will be able to become taxpayers as entrepreneurs in Ukraine, and they will be able to complete many formalities remotely.”

In addition, Utiralov notes that an important act was adopted recently, de facto enabling the electronic signing of documents between Ukrainian and European businesses. “Until Ukraine signs a respective agreement with the EU, we have unilaterally recognized that qualified electronic signatures issued in the EU are equal by legal force to those issued in Ukraine,” he says. According to Utiralov, due to the war, “paper documents have become more burdensome, as a lot of clients were enquiring about electronic signing with foreign counterparties, as sometimes they have issues with it. As a result of the new act, electronic signing between EU and Ukrainian legal entities will become risk-free, therefore, we hope that it will have a positive impact on our economy.” ■

EU Accession and Election Milestones for Bosnia and Herzegovina: A Buzz Interview with Sead Miljkovic of Miljkovic & Partners

By Teona Gelashvili (January 9, 2023)

This is a breakthrough moment for Bosnia and Herzegovina as the country receives the EU membership candidacy status but, still, there are difficulties ahead, according to Miljkovic & Partners Managing Partner Sead Miljkovic.

“After six years of filing an application for EU candidacy, and 14 years since the signing of the stabilization and association agreement, Bosnia and Herzegovina finally received the EU membership candidacy status in mid-December,” Miljkovic says. “This is good news for investors, and we are happy as professionals and citizens that this process is moving forward. However, knowing that it will take additional years to fulfill the criteria for joining the EU, we are aware that there are still a lot of difficulties ahead, including reaching a political consensus on certain important aspects. We do not expect this process to be smooth.”

[Receiving EU membership candidacy status] is good news for investors, and we are happy as professionals and citizens that this process is moving forward. However, knowing that it will take additional years to fulfill the criteria for joining the EU, we are aware that there are still a lot of difficulties ahead, including reaching a political consensus on certain important aspects. We do not expect this process to be smooth.

“The other important development is the general elections for all levels except local authorities, held in October,” Miljkovic notes. “For a while, we were waiting for the results to be published as the process was challenged by political stakeholders. In the past three or four weeks, there have been serious discussions between the stakeholders for the formation of the government at the state level, which is obviously very important for the country and the progress toward EU membership.” According to him, so far, a consensus might have been reached among the major political players. “The coalition agreement regulating principles of governance until 2026 has been signed by eight different parties representing the civic block, two center-right parties – SNSD and HDZ – as well as their coalition partners that will be forming this stretched coalition,” Miljkovic points out.

“For the legal sector, these are positive moves, as we might finally get a more functional government at the state and entity levels,” Miljkovic says. “It is obviously something that impacts the economy to a great extent and hopefully will result in the generation of investments. This is a breakthrough moment compared to the past years for a number of reasons, but a major one is that we will finally have a government that is not on a technical mandate similar to the previous one, with the same people being in power for over eight years.” According to him, this has led to a number of criminal charges and blockades of main processes, such as the adoption of legislation and implementation of major infrastructure projects.

Miljkovic highlights that for the market, there is a slight rise in insolvency and restructuring cases. “Recently, there was a large restructuring proceeding involving six banks, including international banks with a seat outside of Bosnia and Herzegovina,” he notes. Miljkovic says that some changes are expected: “as a result of inflation and the energy crisis, we are about to see what the outcome will be. The Bosnian currency is linked to the euro, and the fall of the euro against other currencies has an impact on us as well. We expect some sort of slowdown.”

On the bright side, Miljkovic points out that there is an increase in interest in renewable energy projects. “This is of strategic importance for the country: the current resources and generation facilities are quite outdated, which definitely asks for a shift in investment policy from traditional sources such as coal to greener energy,” he notes. ■

Tech-Estonia:

A Buzz Interview with Toomas Seppel of Hedman

By Teona Gelashvili (January 9, 2023)

Estonia's present and future are linked to information technology, blockchain, and different technology-currency relations, with new regulations on the horizon, according to Hedman Law Firm Partner Toomas Seppel.

"Estonia has been a very active market with changes in cryptocurrency regulations on average, and twice this year," Seppel says. "We were one of the first countries to introduce cryptocurrency laws in 2017. The main reason for it was that there used to be more than 1,500 cryptocurrency companies – the market was overcrowded, and the regulators could not keep up anymore, so they had to change the law. It is now a difficult environment with only the strongest surviving."

Seppel highlights that different scandals in cryptocurrencies and the "Crypto Winter" have affected the market, and the virtual currency rates are going down. "We are optimistic about the new European Union cryptocurrency regulations coming, called the MiCA. We might be the first country to introduce the MiCA and prepare for those changes," he notes. Still, Seppel says that "there is an active crypto services market, but the companies are more mature. It is harder to join the market in terms of resources, procedures, and compliance. It used to be much easier, but now you need a well-capitalized company to cope with rapid updates and changes." According to Seppel, it is still a hot topic in Estonia: "we are trying to keep Estonia as the best place to do business in terms of regulations, ecosystem, technology, investments, and everything else. New products and services are being developed and are ready to go on the market now and after the MiCA."

Other than that, Seppel says that Estonia is also preparing for the EU regulations for technology companies on artificial intelligence and data portability. "It is an interesting time for technology companies working with artificial intelligence and big data," he notes. "Interesting times are ahead, with the possibilities for small EU players to go to the market being improved, as opposed to now, when big foreign technology players are calling the shots."

"2022 was an active year, despite being affected by the crises," Seppel adds. "The prognosis is less optimistic for the coming year. It is more difficult to raise money, but it is still possible with an active venture capital market and investors. However, companies have to prove that they have a strong team and a good product with the possibility to scale up the business. Investors are asking more questions, and you have to have those answers ready."

Seppel adds that still, in Estonia, there is reason to be optimistic. "Transactions might take longer, but we still have an active market," he says. "Moreover, the COVID-19 pandemic showed that if something is happening in economy and society, technology companies are fast to adapt and provide new services. Technology companies and start-ups are still ready to rise to the challenge – they are problem solvers." Therefore, Seppel says, "even in bad times and challenges, such as the energy crisis and layoffs, there is hope that technology companies will come up with sustainable solutions." ■

We are trying to keep Estonia as the best place to do business in terms of regulations, ecosystem, technology, investments, and everything else. New products and services are being developed and are ready to go on the market now and after the MiCA.

Poland's State of Flux: A Buzz Interview with Cezary Zelaznicki of PwC Legal

By Andrija Djonovic (January 10, 2023)

Poland is experiencing a lot of regulatory and legislative changes, primarily driven by (new) EU directives. The energy, commercial, employment, and consumer protection sectors are all in flux, according to Cezary Zelaznicki, PwC Legal Poland Managing Partner and PwC

EMEA Legal Business Solutions Leader.

“The energy crisis and the market’s response to it will likely be the hottest topic in the near future,” Zelaznicki begins. “With the incoming EU directives soon to be implemented in Poland, the way in which the energy markets ebb and flow will change.” What’s more, he reports that the Polish government has introduced “a number of support packages seeking to reduce the negative impact of the rising energy prices by, in particular, introducing measures such as price freezes for sensitive customers and setting a maximum price for selected types of customers and the balancing market.”

A general trend that we have seen, as a consequence of the changing and trying times we live in – a trend of clients seeking a foundational change in the way legal services are consumed. [Clients are] looking to outsource entire processes to be delivered with the support of technology and in alternative delivery models (ADMs) in an effort to streamline their operations – and with all that’s going on right now, the markets will have to adapt.

Zelaznicki also reports that, after “many years of considerations and analysis, the Polish commercial code received a much-needed overhaul. Now, the code includes holding law regulations that allow local subsidiary companies to be guided by overall group interests.” That wasn’t the case before, as

“there had been many complications that local subsidiaries were facing because the regulator only took into account the interest of the local company and not the group as a whole,” he explains.

According to Zelaznicki, this means that certain decisions – for example, related to global financing and loans or group reorganizations – are less problematic to undertake. “The holding law principles allow for a much broader interpretation,” he says. “The concept of binding instructions has also been introduced, which will ultimately provide important guidance as to what a local subsidiary can and cannot do while securing the local officers.”

There has also been movement on employment and consumer protection legislation, Zelaznicki says. “The EU well-being directive’s expected implementation will change certain statutory conditions of employment and rights of employees, among others aimed at facilitating combining work and private life for parents. In addition, the new legislation is to be adopted regulating remote work in a more comprehensive way than the legal frame existing currently. Also, there are new possibilities for employers when it comes to testing their employees for sobriety and drug usage,” he explains. “Moreover, with the incoming implementation of the Omnibus directive into the Polish legal order arriving soon, there will be changes made with respect to consumer protection.” According to Zelaznicki, these will be most important for the retail industry and online marketplaces. “A new mechanism for consumer protection will be implemented, with more transparent information required to be made readily available for all,” he adds.

Finally, Zelaznicki offers an insight into “a general trend that we have seen, as a consequence of the changing and trying times we live in – a trend of clients seeking a foundational change in the way legal services are consumed.” According to him, clients are “looking to outsource entire processes to be delivered with the support of technology and in alternative delivery models (ADMs) in an effort to streamline their operations – and with all that’s going on right now, the markets will have to adapt.” ■

Slovenia's Crowded and Controversial Docket: A Buzz Interview with Matjaz Ulcar of Ulcar & Partnerji

By Teona Gelashvili (January 11, 2023)

Developments in legislation, controversy on the measures dealing with the energy crisis, and interesting M&A transactions are the major talking points in Slovenia, according to Ulcar & Partnerji Managing Partner Matjaz Ulcar.

“Several systemic changes have been implemented by the legislator in the past few months,” Ulcar says. “The first is the Consumer Protection Act, which aims to align with recent developments at the EU level and started to apply in January 2023. The second is the recently adopted Prevention of Restriction of Competition Act, which, inter alia, implements simplified procedures only involving a routine check of mergers not giving rise to meaningful competition problems. The new Electronic Communications Act provides an updated regulatory framework for electronic communications services, aimed at providing the basis for the acceleration of digitalization in Slovenia,” and network improvement. He also highlights the act implementing the EU crowdfunding regulation, “governing the supervision of crowdfunding services.”

And a recent Constitutional Court decision on loan agreements in Swiss francs has far-reaching implications. “The court ruled that the disputed act applied to certain relations retroactively and as such presented a significant threat to the rule of law since there was no prevailing public interest to justify such retroactive validity.” According to Ulcar, “certain class actions, initiated by different groups of consumers, are pending, but it is unclear whether there are still legal grounds for such actions given the CC’s decision. It will be interesting to see what the court decides in these cases.”

According to Ulcar, the measures dealing with the energy crisis also stir controversy: “the government enacted a package of laws, aimed at addressing the energy crisis and mitigating issues that companies may have with energy procurement, particularly with electricity and gas. As part of these measures, the government implemented price controls for certain groups of distributors, including deliveries of natural gas and electricity. Under these price controls, suppliers are required to provide the energy sources at prices below the market rate.” According to him, it is currently unclear, however, whether these companies will be compensated by the state.

Price adjustments in various economic sectors, including energy companies, are also likely to be a hot topic in the coming months. There has already been an increase in litigation related to force majeure and price adjustments, and it is expected that there will be more negotiations and possibly an increase in disputes in the future.

Ulcar notes that, while these measures may provide short-term solutions, more investment in energy generation from renewable sources will be needed in the future. “In addition, streamlining zoning and permitting procedures will be crucial to avoid delays in the development of new energy sources,” he says. “Price adjustments in various economic sectors, including energy companies, are also likely to be a hot topic in the coming months. There has already been an increase in litigation related to force majeure and price adjustments, and it is expected that there will be more negotiations and possibly an increase in disputes in the future.”

Finally, Ulcar highlights key transactions. “We had two big exits, valued at over EUR 200 million, that included sales of Slovenian companies. Pipistrel was sold to American conglomerate Textron and Joc Pececnik sold his business in the entertainment and gaming industry.” Also, the Slovenian Alfi Green Energy Fund just recently “completed the first project financing, related to the development of a 105-megawatt wind power plant in Serbia.” According to him, “the project is significant due to its nature, size, and high development potential. It is exciting to see that it is possible to fully privately finance non-subsidized projects in a different jurisdiction.” ■

No Time Like the Present in Latvia: A Buzz Interview with Julija Jerneva of Vilgerts

By Andrija Djonovic (January 11, 2023)

Much like in other countries in the region, Latvia experienced a strong finish to 2022, with bustling M&A activity being driven primarily by the current geopolitical and economic developments, according to Vilgerts Partner Julija Jerneva.

“With the end of the year so near, everybody was rushing to wrap projects up, so it was a very busy period,” Jerneva begins. “We are seeing surprisingly high levels of M&A activity related to the currently imposed sanctions on Russia in particular.” She explains there is a number of Russian-owned assets that are, for all intents and purposes, frozen. “The assets, that would otherwise remain frozen with business operations suspended, would be sold – the proceeds from the transactions still frozen, to comply with the sanctions regime,” she explains. “Additionally, there is a deadline until which such assets could be sold: initially, it was December 30, 2022, but it has since been pushed back to February 28, 2023.”

Aside from high investor interest in these frozen “toxic” assets, Jerneva reports an overall investment climate that is quite vibrant. “It appears that investors are employing a ‘no time like the present’ approach when it comes to placing funds. This is likely driven by a fear of incoming high inflation,” she explains. And the inflation rate is indeed very high – standing at 21.8% in December. “There hasn’t been an evident pattern to these investments, but rather a really very wide scope of targets,” she says, indicating that investor preference dictates activity. “Of course, one could draw a conclusion that the real estate sector is performing above and beyond, but there is also ample activity elsewhere.”

Jerneva goes on to say there is a lot of pressure on companies to alter their business approach. “With the inflation rate being where it is, many businesses are under pressure to amend their long-term agreements and contracts. In particular, this has led to an uptick in employment-related work.” According to her, financial uncertainty and the still-present COVID-19 are pressuring labor-intensive sectors to transform. “On the one hand, the employees are feeling the need to increase their income on account of the inflation, while employers, on the other hand, are feeling the need to restructure their operational models.” Still, the unemployment rate in Latvia stands at 6%, which Jerneva characterizes as “stable, given the current geopolitical and economic context. The burn is spread out evenly on all business sectors, with services, perhaps, feeling it the most.”

Finally, looking at recent legislative updates of note, Jerneva reports little to no activity. “The new government and the new parliament have just come to be, following the elections. It is still very, very early to tell how the new legislative and ruling bodies will set their priorities.” Jerneva says “the balance of power between the parties has shifted with these elections. Right now, we have to wait and see what kind of priority list emerges.” ■

Promising New Year in the Czech Republic: A Buzz Interview with Vladimir Cizek of Schoenherr

By Andrija Djonovic (January 17, 2023)

The Czech Republic is looking at a promising start to the year, after somewhat of a market slowdown towards the end of 2022, with no dark clouds on the horizon just yet, according to Schoenherr Partner Vladimir Cizek.

“We have seen some levels of uncertainty in the market over the past two or three months,” Cizek begins. “While there still could be some residual doubts that market participants might have, I would not say that things look bleak for the future.” According to Cizek, funds are slowly but surely getting back at it, especially with the financial year starting over: “towards the end of 2022, it appeared that private equity funds were scrambling for targets a little bit – for multiple reasons – which was evident in slow market movement in the back half of November and early December, but things are clearing up.”

According to Cizek, their office was busy as 2022 came to a close as had been usual for any year-end. “Focusing in on our particular segment of the M&A market, we have seen a lot of projects, signings, and closings – so it wasn’t a decline by any measure,” he says. “Still, looking at the rest of the market, there were moments where major deals fell through after multiple months of negotiations – on account of the negotiating parties losing focus of their intentions.” He explains that, with a number of players in the TMT segment seeing their “portfolios take a hit last year, reverberations were felt. However, looking ahead, I would hope that by the start of the second quarter, things will pick up overall.”

Turning his attention to financing deals, Cizek reports there are challenges. “Financing, for example, real estate, has become quite big of a challenge, especially given the high CNB base interest rate. Compared to two to three years ago, the current situation is very tough,” he says. “Even looking at the countries in the region, like Germany, refinancing is tough. Companies are seeking to compensate by leveraging their shareholders, but it is still unclear as to when refinancing will become easily accessible,” he explains.

Ultimately, financing troubles and the overall market uncertainty and situation (such as increasing input costs) spell out difficulties that translate into distressed M&A work-stream upticks. Yet, according to Cizek, this is still not the case in the Czech Republic. “Looking at a local level, companies appear sound – it is the parent companies that are facing issues,” he says. “I am aware that, conceptually, it might still seem like there will be a tsunami wave of distressed asset litigation, but it is simply not the case yet – at best, we could characterize the status quo as being one of seeing the market correct itself,” Cizek concludes. ■

Greece's Evergreen Plan: A Buzz Interview with Dimitris Assimakis of Reed Smith

By Andrija Djonovic (January 19, 2023)

Renewable energy is slowly becoming an evergreen industry in Greece, with strong investor interest in wind and solar power projects that stand to hasten the recovery of the country, according to Reed Smith Partner Dimitris Assimakis.

“Looking at the past few years, there has been a significant influx of new investments in the Greek renewable energy sector,” Assimakis begins. “The Greek government has extended efforts to attract investors in this field and is still doing so, which means that we expect even stronger interest moving forward. Legislative and policy support, with aggressive targets for this decade and beyond, are influencing the energy sector, primarily power generation,” he explains.

Greece is rich in sunshine and wind, which directly correlates to the types of projects being pursued. “New capacities, of approximately one gigawatt or even more, are coming online almost year on year,” Assimakis continues. “Also, there is an ambitious plan of making a push for the sea, to prop up offshore wind power projects.” Still, the full framework to accommodate the strong interest in such projects, given the country’s high offshore wind potential, is not yet in place. “There are still quite a few legislative acts to be adopted, making the achievement of the set target – the addition of 2 gigawatts in offshore wind capacity by 2030 – a challenging deed,” Assimakis says, “but given that there is so much investment interest in play, it stands to reason that there will be more pushes. Moreover, the government is focusing its efforts on the development of new types of projects – like energy storage – and incentivizing the development of scalable renewable energy projects and innovative green energy projects with added value to the national economy.”

Assimakis explains that, in addition to the solar PV projects being developed, much is being done on the transmission side of things. “Grid operators are strengthening and developing the electricity grids all over the country. Many grid expansion projects have been performed, for example, in linking the Aegean sea islands with the mainland – which is a very important technical requirement for the further development of the sector,” he explains, citing the examples of Crete and the Cycladic islands. In addition, “a second interconnector is under construction with Bulgaria, while a second interconnector is planned with Italy, and there are plans for the development of new linkages with Egypt and Cyprus,” Assimakis says. “Greece has plans to become a green power exporter sometime in the future, and all of the efforts behind that are generating swaths of legal work for the market.”

Overall, Greece is back on a healthy economic track, following several years of macroeconomic global turmoil, Assimakis says. “The country is coping well and 2023 projections are following along the lines of the near-7% growth of 2022.” On these grounds, he reports new investors coming in, with “varied profiles – not just utilities and traditional power developers, but also private equity, investment funds, and alternative investors.” While these investors still primarily come from abroad, Assimakis highlights a “significant push from Greek renewables developers, especially when it comes to wind and solar power. Many private equity and investment funds are looking at Greece, which was reflected on the market in 2022 – big deals took place, and more are sure to come.” ■

Moldova's Troubled Present and Digital Future: A Buzz Interview with Cristina Martin of ACI Partners

By Teona Gelashvili (January 19, 2023)

The country's EU candidate status and grave security concerns gave rise to far-reaching legislative reform in Moldova, with IPOs and digitalization in full swing, according to ACI Partners Partner Cristina Martin.

"2022 wasn't just a difficult, but an unprecedented, historical year for Moldova,"

Martin begins. "Since February 24, 2022, we've constantly been in a state of emergency. There are huge challenges related to conflict, energy security, inflation, and providing shelter for refugees, as well other economic ramifications." On the other hand, Martin points out that on June 23, 2022, Moldova and Ukraine were granted EU candidate status.

"All of these issues generated a huge wave of legislative reforms," she explains. "The hot topic in the business community is the impact of those reforms on the business side – how the government will facilitate the transitions, and how businesses will weather all these challenges."

According to Martin, "there haven't been any major changes in corporate law, however, due to recent requirements on the minimum amount of the share capital of a JSC, 40 IPOs took place on the Moldovan market in the first nine months of 2022 – over ten times more than in previous years. Taking into consideration that the minimum amount is increasing, we might again see a large number of IPOs in Moldova for 2023." According to her, "some companies went the way of reorganizing into limited liability companies, but banks and insurance companies cannot make that switch, which is why IPOs seem more likely."

"Currently, one of Moldova's largest commercial banks, Moldova-Agroindbank, is intending to list its shares on the Bucharest Stock Exchange as well, to attract foreign funds," she says, adding that this is the second foreign-listed company after the Purcari Wineries Group.

"Starting with 2022, the mechanism for the issuance of bonds by LLCs was put in place," Martin points out. "By the end of 2022, we had a draft law providing that companies and local public authorities can issue bonds in foreign currency. This would allow attracting foreign currency through subscriptions by non-residents."

Since February 24, 2022, we've constantly been in a state of emergency. There are huge challenges related to conflict, energy security, inflation, and providing shelter for refugees, as well other economic ramifications.

Another piece of legislation, set to enter into force in June 2023, according to Martin, "provides that foreign securities could be admitted to placement and trading on the regulated market in Moldova if certain conditions are met: the issuers were incorporated at least three years prior, registered a profit for at least two years, and there aren't any trading prohibitions imposed by the operator of a foreign or Moldovan regulated market."

Additionally, Martin highlights reforms in digitalization. "The government already started the program for the digitalization of business activities. From November 2022 Moldovan entities can request online documents from the company registers without the requirement of physical presence within public authorities," she notes. "The goal of the government is to digitalize all business processes in the nearest future." According to her, "another impediment – not being able to grant a personal identification number to foreign investors unless they travel to Moldova – is set to be removed as well. Electronic KYC and mobile-sign services should become available externally as well, for example for the Moldovan diaspora."

Finally, Martin says that the digital format of notary services should be possible soon. "The language barrier would broadly be eliminated by providing all the drafts in English as well," she notes. ■

2022 CEE DEALS OF THE YEAR SUBMISSIONS

CEE Legal Matters received more submissions for the Deals of the Year – in their sixth year of existence – than ever before: 388 submissions, despite two countries not being incorporated in our open call due to our ongoing embargo.

Based on all these submissions, a total of 276 different law firms are now eligible for one or (in many cases) multiple awards this year.

The finalists for the 2022 Deals of the Year award in each country will be announced in March 2023, with the winners to be announced at the annual CEELM Deal of the Year Awards Banquet scheduled for April 25, 2023, in Istanbul. Save the date!

In the meantime, our thanks to everyone who submitted deals for consideration. We appreciate the time and effort you put into the process, and we – like you – are eager to see the results and celebrate the winners this spring in Istanbul. Good luck, one and all!

CEE LEGAL MATTERS 2022 TABLE OF DEALS

The CEE Legal Matters 2022 Table of Deals summarizes 1,679 client matters in Central and Eastern Europe. It was compiled using both the 1,521 matters reported by CEELM throughout 2022 and supplementary deal submissions received from law firms which, for one reason or another, were not covered during the year. In a couple of months, the table will become available in a digital version that allows for searching and sorting, with each entry linking to the relevant coverage on the CEELM website, where available.
